Innovative Trailblazer

The ukelele-playing indie kid of the business world, you like to do things a little bit differently. Whether its experimental marketing techniques, potentially risky investments, or working with clients you've never heard of before, you're all about jumping aboard new opportunities.

I mean, what's life without a little risk, right? If you don't fall on your feet, you never learn how to get back up. You're not afraid to get embarrassed, to lose a little money, or to even hurt your brand. The only true mistake for you is to not try.

But that doesn't mean you're making trigger-happy life-altering decisions at the drop of a hat either. While your organizational skills can be somewhat haphazard, you still take your time to suss out which deals are better than others. Your business isn't something to be tossed into the winds of change without conducting your due diligence first—after all, even those cutting the trail must have a direction to go in.
